WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

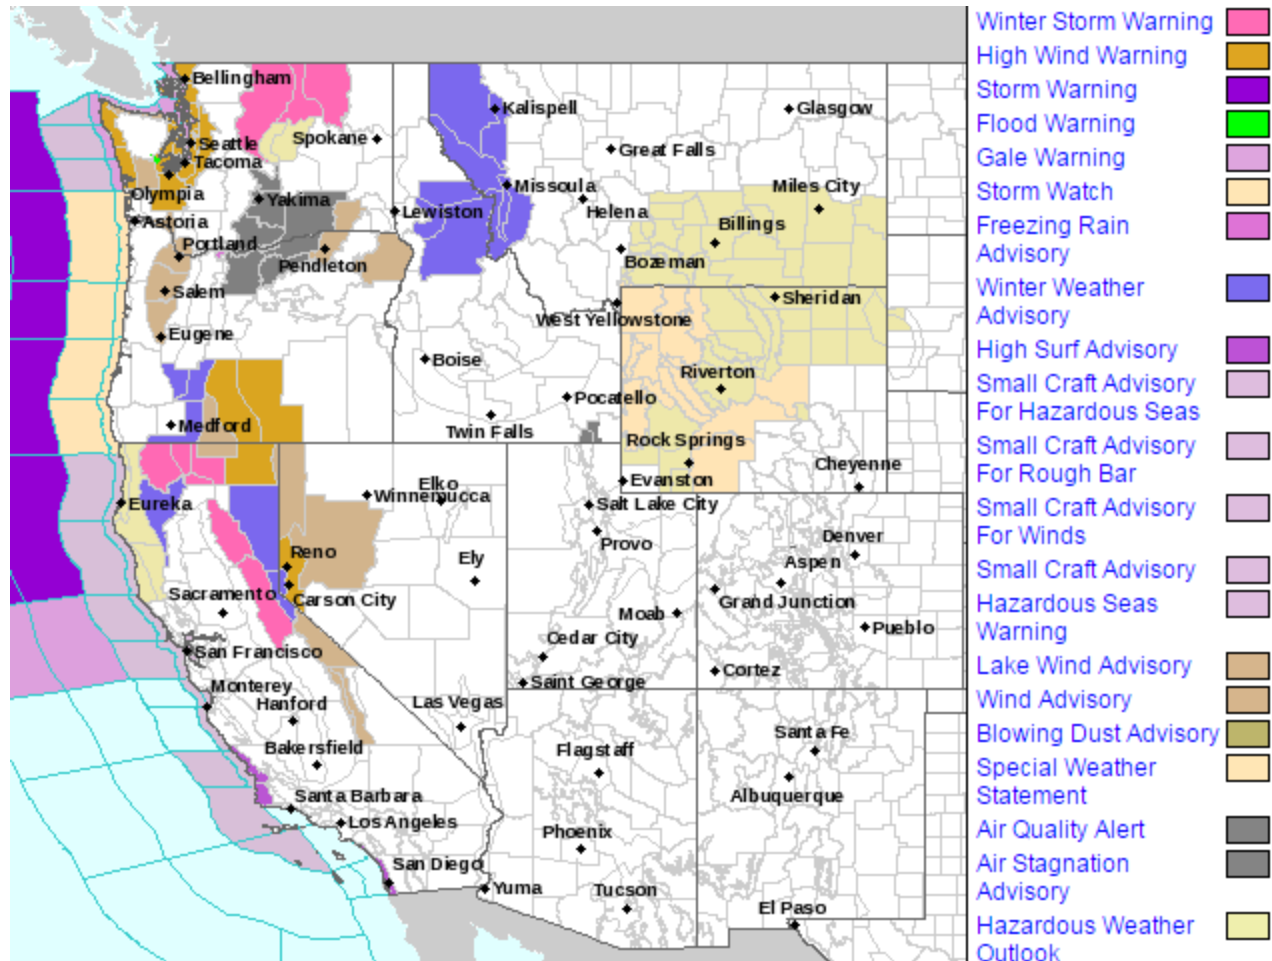

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

A weather system moving ashore this morning will blast across Northern California today with some significant amounts of precipitation and wind. The anticipated rain/snow will be decreasing from the west this evening. Snow levels will be around 4000 ft but dropping to around 3500 ft tonight after most of the precipitation is through. Gusty southerly winds have already developed in the northwestern areas. Speeds of 10-20 mph with gusts 30-40 mph will become quite common as the system moves inland. The higher elevations, Shasta Valley and more exposed areas will see speeds develop on the order of 15-25 mph with gusts up to around 60 mph. The winds will already be decreasing this afternoon from the west however, and become much lighter over the eastern areas early this evening. There will be a break between systems Friday and Saturday, but lingering cloudiness and some showers are also expected, mainly Friday and over the mountains, but not much of that Saturday. Another weather system will move into Northern California Sunday with more precipitation, and a few more weather systems will move through during the week, particularly Monday and Wednesday night. Temperatures and snow levels will remain rather seasonable.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

A Pacific trough approaching the West Coast will bring scattered showers to Central California this afternoon through tonight, with most locations expected to receive less than a quarter inch of rainfall. The snow level will be around 6,000 feet over the Sierra with a few inches of new snowfall. This trough will also bring south to west winds of 15 to 25 mph with gusts to 40 mph to the desert passes this afternoon through Friday morning. Temperatures will cool a few degrees across Central California, but change little across Southern California today. Maximum temperatures will be in the 50s to low 60s across the mountains and upper 60s and 70s in the valleys. Minimum humidity will remain between 20% and 40% across Central California and in the single digits and teens across Southern California today. Temperatures will cool to near normal and minimum humidity will increase to above 30% away from the deserts Friday. A ridge of high pressure will form over California causing temperatures to become well above normal Saturday through the middle of next week. Minimum humidity will be mainly in the single digits across Southern California and between 15% and 30% across Central California Saturday through the middle of next week. Northeast to east winds of 15 to 25 mph with gusts to 40 mph will surface across the mountains and below the canyons and passes of Southern California Friday night through Saturday afternoon. Winds will decrease Saturday evening and light offshore flow will occur through early next week before becoming light onshore by Wednesday.
